ALLIES HIT BACK IN BEACHHEAD

Heavy Bombardment of German Positions

ALLIED guns are now heavily bombarding the German positions following the repulse of the third German attempt to dispose of the Fifth Army bridgehead south of Rome. The Fifth Army's lines now stand exactly as they did before the start of the German attack, it is claimed.

The Allies' beachhead lines, officially disclosed for the first time yesterday, run from a point ten miles up the coast from Anzio, fifteen miles due east, to a point two miles south-west of Cisterna, then at right angles to a coastal point ten miles east of Anzio.

Allied Headquarters last night described the battle as "a complete defensive success."

General Von Mackensen's third effort began at 8 a.m. on Tuesday. Three German divisions were engaged—the 26th Panzers, the 114th Jaeger Rifles, and the 362nd Infantry.

PENETRATION

The Germans made a determined assault on a 1,000 yards front midway between Carroceto and Cisterna. They made a substantial initial penetration, but the Allies succeeded in clearing it in counter-attacks by nightfall on Wednesday. Major credit for the repulse of the attack goes to the American 3rd Infantry Division and units fighting in association with it, states Reuter's Special Correspondent at Allied Headquarters.

While the main assault was in progress the remainder of General Von Mackensen's forces kept up constant pressure around the rest of the perimeter, especially south of Carroceto, where small-scale attacks and infiltration attempts followed each other in rapid succession as the Germans strove to get inside the Allied lines.

One of their most violent attempts was against the British-held sector in the Upper Moletta area. It was repulsed. South-west of Littoria a German company was ambushed and captured as it advanced towards the coast.

Following the repulse of the general German attack Allied guns bombarded the German positions.

Virtually the whole strength of the Mediterranean air forces was thrown against the German positions on Thursday. Including fighters, more aircraft were employed than ever before on a ground co-operation mission. Over 30,000 fragmentation bombs were dropped on troop concentrations by Flying Fortresses and Liberators. Mitchells, Marauders and Bostons dropped high explosive and fragmentation bombs among bivouac areas and supply dumps. Invader dive-bombers attacked the town of Littoria. Ack-Ack was intense, but no German fighters were encountered.

Rome radio said last night: "In the Nettuno invasion area one of the most violent and furious artillery battles ever registered on Italian soil is now going on. Thousands of guns are continuously in action on both sides."

Rome Rail Yards Bombed

Flying Fortresses and Liberators based in Italy attacked the Littorio and Tiburtina railway yards in Rome yesterday. The aerodrome was also bombed. The bombers were escorted by fighters.

Rome Radio last night said: "The city of Rome was heavily bombed at 11 a.m. to-day. British and American 'planes attacked in tight formations and the Ostiense area of the city was particularly hit."

The Radio also said: "A bomb made a direct hit on a shelter crammed with people." The dead are still being dug out from the débris.

"Bombs also fell near the Vatican City," the radio said.—(Reuter.)

St. Patrick's Day Exemption

District Justice Ford, at Galway Court, granted an exemption order under the Intoxicating Liquor Acts, 1927 and 1943, to Mr. H. G. Boardman, manager of the Great Southern Hotel, Galway, for the occasion of a Gaelic League social in the hotel on St. Patrick's Day. The exemption is probably the first since the total closing on that day was decreed by law.

Mr. W. J. Comerford, solicitor, said that under Section 5 of the 1927 Act, as amended by Section 6 of the 1943 Act, general exemption was prohibited on Sundays, Christmas Day, St. Patrick's Day and Good Friday. The next paragraph stated that special exemptions could not be granted in respect of Sundays. He submitted that it was to be inferred from this that special exemptions could be granted on the days not mentioned—viz., Christmas Day, St. Patrick's Day and Good Friday.

The District Justice agreed.

Roscommon Refuses Road Rate

Roscommon County Council, by the casting vote of the Chairman, Mr. J. J. Meighan, T.D. (Farmers), has declined to approve the County Manager's estimate of £213,945, representing a rate of 13s. 10d. in the £, an increase over last year of 9d., and, in accordance with managerial procedure, it will come up for reconsideration.

The crux arose over the proposed allocation of £17,440 for the maintenance of main roads, and when Mr. R. Nally (Farmers) proposed that no money be expended under this head for one year, Mr. M. Nerney, county surveyor, said that the only way to deal with a resolution like that would be to abolish the Council altogether.

The County Manager said that he did not want to hold a stick over their heads, but councillors had certain legal obligations which they could not evade.

£12,000 Fines For Cigar Smuggling

FINES totalling over £12,000 were imposed at Bow Street, London, yesterday, and a man was sent to prison for smuggling cigars from Eire.

Owen Ferris (38), cattle trader, Wardsworth, was sentenced to six months' imprisonment and fined £10,000, with £50 costs, or a further twelve months for dealing in 10,125 uncustomed cigars with intent to defraud.

Conrad Cecil Nash, horse slaughterer, of Bedford avenue, London, was fined £2,000 and £25 costs, or six months' imprisonment, on similar charges concerning 7,135 cigars.

Ferris was alleged to have said that he made 200 journeys to Ireland, each time bringing back 25 cigars duty free, for his personal use, got friends to do the same, and arranged with a man to "run" cigars over the Irish border. He paid a Dublin merchant £2,380 for 20,000.

Train and Motor Meet on Road

Holding that there was a question of law which called for the direction of the Attorney-General, District Justice Keane adjourned until April 21st, at Carrick-on-Shannon, a charge against Patrick Rowley, Ballinamore, an engine driver on the Cavan and Leitrim Railway section of the G.S.R., for driving a train at Carricknabrack, Drumshambo, without reasonable consideration for persons and vehicle in a public place.

It was stated that on December 28th last, Thomas Cregan was driving a hackney motor with passengers to Manorhamilton, and when he reached a level crossing at the point named the train emerged and the driver had to pull on to a bank, only a few inches from it. The driver of the train pulled it off the road and then stopped.

There was a conflict of evidence as to whether a warning had been given by the engine driver of the train's approach from behind a high bank, and it was contended that there was no Board of Trade regulation in regard to blowing a whistle on the train.

To Control Disease In Livestock

Reorganisation of the Irish veterinary profession is likely after the war, an Irish Times reporter learns, and it will result in a firm control of epidemic diseases among livestock. A State Service will place the full power of veterinary science at the disposal of all stockholders.

The Committee of inquiry into post-emergency agricultural policy is the force behind the plan, and it has before it a memorandum from the Veterinary Medical Association of Ireland. The memorandum submitted by the Veterinary Association contains a scheme to combat bovine tuberculosis—the area by area plan announced exclusively a year ago in the Irish Times.

A somewhat similar scheme of reconstruction is being considered in Northern Ireland, it is understood. Already a modified version of the Irish plan is in operation in Great Britain.

Professor Corkey's Warning

The Rev. Professor Corkey stated yesterday that if he had been able to speak at the Unionist Council meeting last Thursday he would have stated that he did not question the right of the Prime Minister to dispense with him if he wished to do so, but he did challenge his right to hold him up to public opprobrium.

Further, there had been a revolution in the minds of political leaders in England, such as Mr. Churchill, Mr. Butler, Mr. Bevan and Mr. Attlee regarding the position of religion in all schools. They had buried sectarianism, but they were determined that the broad principles of their own Christianity should be handed on to their children. Unfortunately, in the North of Ireland, Professor Corkey said, there was a small coterie of people strenuously opposed to the extension of that principle to secondary schools.

Lighthouse Keeper's Illness

An SOS was received from the Tuskar Rock Lighthouse, six miles off the Wexford coast, yesterday, stating that one of the keepers was ill. Rough seas, however, prevented the relief boat at Rosslare from going out. It is now 24 days since a boat visited the lighthouse, and one man has been 78 days on duty. The men are on iron rations, augmented by bread baked from flour mixed with salt water. They have also a limited quantity of potatoes. It was confirmed yesterday that, when conditions permit, all three isolated keepers are to be brought ashore, instead of one as normally occurs.

Dundalk Football Club's Loss

Two dressingrooms and their contents, which included boots, jerseys, stockings and training equipment, were destroyed by fire yesterday morning at Oriel Park, the headquarters of Dundalk Association Football Club. Apart from structural loss, the damage is estimated at several hundred pounds.

Americans' First Raid On Berlin

FIVE-TON BOMBS ON FRENCH TOWN

UNITED STATES aircraft made their first flight over Berlin yesterday, when they attacked the city in daylight. Other targets in North-west Germany and Northern France were also bombed.

It was disclosed last night that during a raid on factories at Albert on Thursday night British aircraft dropped bombs weighing more than five tons each.

Many people are said to have been killed in a shelter which was hit by a bomb when a heavy air attack was made on Rome yesterday, and Paris Radio stated last night that 40 people were killed in a town in the Somme Department, which was bombed yesterday afternoon.

United States Strategic Air Forces in Europe reported last night that the flight over Berlin was carried out by A.A.F. fighter aircraft while Eighth A.A.F. heavy bombers were attacking targets in north-west Germany.

The German News Agency said that American bombers tried to evade the defences by seeking cover in dense cloud, but they were engaged in air battles.

It also stated that the opera house in Charlottenburg, a Berlin suburb, hit during R.A.F. raids, took over another theatre, but this was also hit. The opera has now moved to its third home this winter.

This is only the second time that offensive operations have been reported over Berlin in daylight, writes a Press Association air correspondent. The first was on January 30, 1943, when R.A.F. Mosquitos twice bombed the city. The type of offensive sweep by A.A.F. fighters yesterday is not mentioned. Presumably it was a gun offensive, without bombs being dropped.

It has been known for some time that the Americans' new long-range fighters are capable of reaching Berlin.

A report last night from Headquarters, U.S. Strategic Air Forces in Europe stated: "Lightnings of Eighth Air Force carried out an offensive sweep over Berlin to-day, while Flying Fortresses and Liberators attacked targets in North-West Germany.

"The fighters destroyed eight enemy aircraft during all operations. Those destroyed by our bombers have not yet been tabulated. Six fighters and ten bombers are missing."

AIRFIELDS HIT

Another official statement said last night:—

"This morning B 26 Marauder medium bombers of the United States 9th Air Force, escorted and covered by R.A.F., Dominion and Allied fighters, attacked airfields in Northern France, and Typhoon fighter bombers of the 2nd Tactical Air Force attacked military objectives, also in Northern France.

"United States Military Headquarters and the British Air Ministry News Service stated:—

"More than 250 B 26 Marauder medium bombers of the United States 9th Air Force this morning carried out fierce attacks on four Luftwaffe Airfields in France, some of which have probably been used as bases for night bombing attacks on Britain.

"The four targets were all approximately 60 miles north-east of Paris. One was an airfield near Laon, more than 130 miles inland, and the point of deepest penetration for the Marauders in almost eight months of operation from Britain. The medium bombers also pounded Luftwaffe bases at Rosieres-en-Santerre, Montdidier and Beauvais-Tille.

"The Marauders and their escort of R.A.F., Dominion and Allied Spitfires all returned safely from these operations. Bomber crews said they sighted no enemy aircraft anywhere on their 260-mile sweep from the coast to the targets and back."

THURSDAY NIGHT

A British Air Ministry report yesterday stated:—

On Thursday night aircraft of Bomber Command attacked the aircraft assembly plant at Meulan-les-Mureaux, a few miles to the north-west of Paris, and an aircraft factory at Albert, in Northern France. The targets were clearly identified, and first reports indicate that the bombing was effective. Mosquitos attacked objectives in Western Germany, and other aircraft laid mines in enemy waters. None of our aircraft is missing.

The plant at Meulan-les-Mureaux makes components for Me. 109s and repairs fighter and reconnaissance aircraft. The factory at Albert repairs Hero engines and assembles them for F.W. 190s.

THE BIG BOMB

The R.A.F.'s biggest bomb, the new 12,000-pounder, was used on Thursday night, when a Lancaster bomber squadron attacked the aircraft and aircraft component factory at Albert, in Northern France, states the British Air Ministry News Service. This is the bomb which British scientists have invented for attacks on special targets. Its destructive effect on a big factory has already been proved to be enormous.

United States Headquarters stated last night that during Thursday's operations, which included a thrust into South-West Germany, ten heavy bombers were lost—one less than had been announced earlier—and three fighters did not return.

"P47 Thunderbolts, P38 Lightnings and P51 Mustangs of the Eighth and Ninth Air Forces, escorting the bombers on Thursday, destroyed 17 enemy aircraft in the air and two on the ground. The bombers shot down at least three more. No assessment of damage to targets in South-West Germany in Thursday's attack is available at present."

Paris radio said last night that United States bombers yesterday afternoon delivered a "heavy raid" on a town in the Somme department, in Northern France. Eighteen were killed and 40 wounded.

A neighbouring town and village, and many other localities in the Somme department were also bombed, it added.—(Reuter.)

The German News Agency stated yesterday that light German naval forces shelled Bastia, in Corsica, on Wednesday night, and later repelled an unsuccessful attack by British m.t.bs.

Strike Called Off

A C.B.S. commentator, broadcasting from Naples last night, said that the ten-minute strike which was to have been held in Naples to-day has been called off.

German-Swiss Trade Pact Ends

SWISS RADIO said last night that the trade agreement between Germany and Switzerland, which expired at the end of February, 1944, has not been renewed.—(Reuter.)

Italian Warships For Russia

President Roosevelt announced yesterday in Washington, states Reuter, that Italian warships are to be sent to the Russian Navy.

Discussions for transferring, roughly, one-third of the Italian Fleet to Russia, the President said, were about half-completed, and efforts are now being made to determine how many of these ships can be turned over to the Russian Navy. Marshal Stalin had raised the question through his Ambassador in Washington.—(Reuter.)

"There Will Be No More Dunkirks"

—MR. HERBERT MORRISON.

MR. HERBERT MORRISON, British Home Secretary, stated in Sheffield last night: "There will be no more Dunkirks. This time there will be no mistake about the outcome.

"We mean to get into Europe, to get at Germany.

"This time, we look forward, not to invasion, but to evasion, and we look forward, not to an unspecified future, but to the prospect of a great military operation, whose general nature we understand very well. We look forward with the cold, unshakable resolution of a people which has stood over four and a half years of war."

The British people had passed through pretty well all the tests that war could bring. Now it was waiting for a climax that would call for qualities that had always been considered the most typically British of all.

"The ordinary British soldier in all wars has won historic reputation for his ability to hang on, as he has done for the past four years, and then, when the enemy has exhausted himself or been worn down, to leap to the attack with full force. That is exactly the quality that the British people is now showing itself to possess. It is a strong finisher."

The latest casualty figures for Britain's three-armed services for the first three years of the war showed 75,477 killed, 152,204 missing and prisoners of war, and 50,163 wounded. In the Italian campaign alone the Army's figures were 7,635 killed, 5,705 missing, and 23,283 wounded. The total of bombing casualties among civilians was 50,324 killed and 163,075 injured.

"The recent raids on London, though not comparable with the Luftwaffe's worst performances in 1940-41, have been quite bad enough, and there have been some few episodes comparable with the worst single incidents of the big blitzes.

"The Luftwaffe has been operating with a limited, patched-up force which the R.A.F., in its present mighty strength, would hardly bother to send out over Germany."

Mr. Morrison said that the dropping by the R.A.F. of metalled strips to confuse the Germans' detection devices, since copied by the Germans, had saved "very many of our bombers and their precious crews." It was worth more to the R.A.F., as their attacks were larger.

"It is not always realised that Britain could man and equip even larger armies had we not put a great proportion of our manpower into building, maintaining, equipping and flying that terrific instrument of victory—the R.A.F.

"Remembering all this, I confess I am astonished every time I think over the implications of the fact that the Prime Minister has recently given to the country—the fact that the forces that will make the first attack upon German Europe will be half of them British. When you consider the relative size and commitments of ourselves and our allies this is an achievement in which we and our children after us can take full and legitimate pride."

Inspectors' Tour of Irish Hotels

FORTY men will start out from Dublin next Monday on a tour of Eire, in the course of which they will visit nearly 1,000 hotels and 1,500 boarding-houses and guest-houses.

They will stay in hotels only sufficiently long to enable them to inspect the premises, note the accommodation and facilities provided. They are being sent out by the Irish Tourist Board to "vet" the hotels for the advancement of business.

Having compiled a list of hotels and boarding-houses, the Board now is proceeding to ensure that those which apply for registration under the Tourist Traffic Act, 1939, will comply with the requirements laid down under the Statute. The inspectors will go through bedrooms in the hotels and will assess their cubic capacity, in order to make certain that each has a capacity of 600 cubic feet per person; they will count the number of bedrooms to apply the test that for each ten or fraction of ten over that number there must be a lavatory, and they will inspect the diningroom accommodation to satisfy themselves that every person staying in the house may be comfortably served.

Those who comply with the regulations will receive a licence, and those who do not get a licence may make necessary alterations and apply again. The decision to grant a licence rests with the Board.

It will be the first time in history that Irish hotels will be placed on a standard basis.

Belfast Dissatisfied with T.U.C. Decision

A letter has been sent by Belfast Trades Council to Mr. Cathal O'Shannon, Secretary, Irish Trades Union Congress, expressing "extreme dissatisfaction at the decision of the National Executive not to be represented at the World Trade Union Conference."

The letter stated that while the Council appreciated that Eire was neutral, they could not understand the recent decision, as the National Executive also represented Northern Ireland.

The General Secretary of the British Trade Union Congress, Sir Walter Citrine, has been requested to have an invitation sent to Belfast Trades Council to be represented.

Burglaries in Cork

Montague Burton's premises at Patrick street, Cork, were broken into on Thursday night, and suits of clothes, overcoats, and suit lengths, valued at £125, taken away.

Dollymount To Be Scene for Film

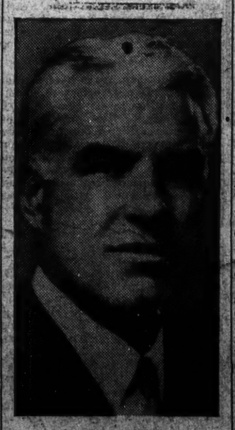
Next June Dublin will have another taste of film production, when Independent Producers produce "Cæsar and Cleopatra." This, it is believed, will be the biggest British film for a long time. Vivien Leigh will play the part of Cleopatra, and Cæsar will be played by Claude Rains.

Some of the outdoor scenes will be shot at Dollymount, and it is expected that at least 1,000 extras will be employed as foot soldiers, galley slaves, etc.

The producer is Gabriel Pascal, who was responsible for the production of "Pygmalion." It is said of Pascal that when he arrived first in London he was penniless, and that he put up at the Savoy. He took a taxi to Whitehall Court to see Shaw and borrowed £1 to pay the taxi.

Man's Body In Liffey

The body of an elderly man was taken from the Liffey at Burgh quay, Dublin, late last night. An envelope found in his pocket bore a name and address in Upper Leeson street, Dublin.



Mr. Edward R. Stettinius, Acting Secretary of State, who is to visit London, President Roosevelt stated yesterday in Washington. The President said that Stettinius is to discuss with British officials a dozen or more questions awaiting solution, but his talks will not constitute a full dress conference.

T.D's Call For Better Pensions

The Labour and Fine Gael Parties have tabled motions in the Dail asking for an improvement in the scheme of widows' and orphans' pensions. The Labour motion, signed by Deputies Davin, Murphy and Tunney, asks that all widows' pensions be increased to a flat rate of 25s. a week. At present pensions are paid in three categories: The widow of an insured man who was not an agricultural worker gets 10s. a week; the widow of an insured agricultural worker gets 8s. a week; and the widow of a non-insured worker (whose pension is subject to a means test) is entitled to a maximum of 7s. 6d. a week in a borough, 6s. in an urban area, and 5s. in a rural area. The pension provision for orphans in connection with the foregoing categories varies from 5s. to 1s. 6d. per week each.

The Labour motion proposes that there shall be a flat rate of 10s. per week for the eldest child and 5s. per week for every other child until the age of 16. At present the allowance for a child ceases at 14, unless the child continues at school.

Deputies Linehan and MacEoin, on behalf of Fine Gael, have tabled an amendment asking that the pensions and allowances should be made sufficiently high to enable recipients to secure a reasonable standard of living, and that special regard be had to the hardship inflicted by the low rates prevailing in non-contributory cases. They also ask that allowances be paid to widows during widowhood irrespective of age. Fine Gael also supports the principal motion where it asks that incomes up to £52 be ignored for the purposes of the means test.

A.R.P. Exercises in Dublin

DUBLIN'S bus and tram services are liable to be altered or interrupted to-morrow, between 9.30 a.m. and noon, because of large-scale A.R.P. exercises.

Air-raid sirens will be sounded, and smoke candles and practice explosive bombs will be used.

Food Cheaper And More Plentiful

FOOD, generally, has become more plentiful and slightly cheaper since the Christmas period.

Yesterday an Irish Times reporter made a brief survey of the food position, and discovered that there has been an all-round improvement in conditions on Ireland's "food front." Fresh vegetables are plentiful and cheap. Cabbage, in spite of a slight increase in price during the week, is still selling at low prices in the market, and other vegetables in good supply include carrots and parsnips. Leeks have also come on the market recently. Potatoes, which are still plentiful, have been selling at, roughly, the same price for the last two or three months, and, in spite of rumours of an impending potato shortage, the reporter was informed that there would seem to be no basis in fact for these rumours, unless the supply of bags, at present precarious, fails altogether.

Apples are extremely scarce and abnormally dear, in comparison with previous years. This is due to the very bad season for apples last year. Eggs, as is usual at this time of year, are more plentiful. There are ample supplies to meet requirements.

There has been little or no change in the position with regard to other grocery supplies such as tinned foods, sugar, bread, milk. Raisins and muscatels, plentiful at Christmas, have disappeared, but it is hoped that a supply of figs will arrive in the near future.

There are ample supplies of coffee and cocoa in the country. One brand of cocoa was reduced in price recently.

Bacon, though still dear, is comparatively plentiful. This is partly due to a seasonal decline in the consumption of bacon. Meat, too, is plentiful, but is selling at abnormally high prices. All types of meat increase in price steadily from Christmas until the following May, when the grass cattle come in, but this year prices exceed the prices that were charged in the corresponding period last year. At the same time, the demand for meat has decreased. "People seem to have less money to spend on meat at present," a Dublin butcher said.

It is difficult to give statistics about the supplies of fish, as they change vastly from day to day. Prices at present are moderate. "They have been a good deal lower, and they have been a good deal higher," a fishmonger said. Salmon is available at high prices, and the most common varieties of fish are cod, plaice, whiting and black sole.

So far as butter is concerned, supplies continue to be drawn from reserves, so that there is little likelihood of an increase in the six-ounce ration.

Minister Calls For A.R.P. Recruits

"We have survived without having been called upon to put our knowledge of A.R.P. work into operation, except very occasionally and to a very slight extent, and we can only trust in God that that state of affairs may continue," said Mr. Frank Aiken, Minister for the Co-ordination of Defensive Measures, last night, when he presented prizes to the winners of an efficiency test sponsored by Area No. 2, A.R.P. Warden Service, at the Library, Charleville Mall, Dublin.

After congratulating the winners on the very high standard of efficiency displayed, Mr. Aiken said that those who were fit physically and mentally should be in one or other of the voluntary organisations. He expressed the hope that, as a result of the interest aroused in the various competitions and exercises, the A.R.P. would be strengthened, and that those who had not joined would do so.

Mr. P. J. Hernon, City Manager, also congratulated the winners.

Major A. X. Lawlor, Military Director, A.R.P.; Mr. W. P. Blondell, Principal Officer, A.R.P. Branch, Department of Defence; Chief Warden R. S. Laurie, and Area Warden W. E. Conroy also spoke.

The winners of the efficiency test were:—Mr. D. [illegible]nnellan, 1; Mr. [illegible]

GERMAN GARRISON CUT OFF

Soviet Forces Reach Gulf of Finland

RUSSIAN forces have reached the Gulf of Finland west of Narva, after fighting their way across the last strip of German-held territory, and cut off retreat for the German garrison, Reuter's special correspondent cables from Moscow.

Front despatches also report a worsening of the German position at Pskov, southern gateway to Estonia, states this correspondent, while the Russian drive on the Latvian border is gathering speed. Ostrov, twelve miles from the border, is threatened by two converging columns. At the southernmost point of the northern front pressure against Vitebsk is being increased.

The battle for the Baltic, concentrated now in separate, but co-ordinated, actions against these four key towns, may soon spread to a general offensive on a 300-mile stretch.

The Russian corridor across the Narva-Tallinn railway beyond the town, and now pushed as far as the Gulf of Finland shore, is being strengthened and consolidated, in face of determined German attempts to wipe it out. At Pskov, where the grim battle continues under the walls of the city, and at its near approaches in the south-east, the Germans are very slowly yielding ground.

The Russian outflanking drive below Pskov, linked with the thrust further south towards the Latvian border, is beginning to bring a substantial German force concentrated between Pskov and Ostrov under threat of encirclement. Soviet troops advancing from the south-east have broken across the Pskov-Idritsa railway at two more points, and, with a second force moving down from the north-east, have almost neutralised Ostrov. Twenty miles south-east of Ostrov, and the same distance from the Latvian frontier, fighting has reached the approaches of the German strong point of Pushinsky Gory, and is spreading along a widening sector in the direction of Vitebsk.

Russian moves to convey reinforcements and supplies to the Kerch bridgehead, in the Eastern Crimea, were mentioned by the German commentator, Col. Von Hammer, last night. These movements, he declared, and others across the Sivash Channel, were effectively bombed by battle-plane squadrons, while attacks on the Kerch front and the approaches to [illegible] Crimea northern [illegible]ead. Girls' Important Part in Fire Control

Girl telephone operators of the Auxiliary Fire Service, working in an underground room at Dublin's Central Fire Station, will play an important part in keeping open communications with A.R.P. authorities in the event of an "emergency."

Last night an Irish Times reporter went underground at Fire Brigade Headquarters, and saw the girls working in realistic conditions. The calm atmosphere was disturbed by the sound of telephone bells and voices monotonously repeating messages. The operators were preparing for the large-scale civil defence exercise to take place to-morrow. The exercise will reproduce emergency conditions, and the [illegible] girls at their telephones will record "fires" as and where they occur.

This underground room is just like any other telephone exchange, until one looks at the map covering a wall. As the evening (or the raid) wears on, red flags appear, and a glance tells the number of serious fires.

The map plotter is responsible for the flags, which he keeps up-to-date from the telephone messages. Another man at the "appliance board" records with coloured discs the location of various sections of the fire brigade. The situation varies from minute to minute, and every quarter of an hour the deputy Fire Report Officer contacts A.R.P. Headquarters, which arranges for the dispatch of reinforcements to areas in need.

The girls are very efficient, and the only hitch last night occurred when, by mischance, two genuine ambulance calls came through on emergency lines!

A call was received from A.R.P. Headquarters announcing the "all clear," but until all fires were under control the girls had to stay at their posts.

The "all clear" was, however, a signal for the reporter to go, for this was only a practice. The city services were still operating according to schedule, and 9.30 was zero hour for the last bus.

NTISTS performed a miracle in glass when the optical lens was perfected.

Consider how a simple piece of glass, when treated scientifically, will restore nature's most precious gift—perfect sight.

But such a miracle cannot be performed without skilful and qualified aid. PRESCOTT'S alone can guarantee the THOROUGH EXAMINATION which is ESSENTIAL TO PERFECT VISION.

We have installed for your benefit, the most marvellous apparatus known to optical science—the REFRACTING UNIT—the only one in Ireland today.

Through it every defect of the eye is observed, so that our qualified Opticians can prescribe glasses especially suited to each patient.

Perfect eyes cannot be duplicated—preserve yours by calling for a thorough examination to-day.

Allenby in Egypt

By M. Mansoor

[This is the second and concluding instalment of an article on "Allenby in Egypt," by Field-Marshal Lord Wavell. (Harrap. 12/6 net.)]

WHEN Egypt was occupied by British troops during the World War, Great Britain proclaimed a Protectorate over Egypt as a temporary measure necessitated by the exigencies of war. The war was hardly over when some leading Egyptians, most notable of whom was Saad Zaghlul, came forward to demand that the Protectorate should be ended and that other bonds should be forged, based on free and friendly co-operation between the two countries. This was the beginning of a new phase of the Egyptian political movement, which now took the form of persistent demands for the realisation of their country's claim. Consequently, when a sudden outbreak of disorder, which led to Zaghlul's arrest and exile, occurred in Egypt in March, 1919, Allenby was appointed to be British High Commissioner in that country.

"Surrender"

Soon after his appointment, Allenby, instead of using the big stick on the disturbers of peace, brought back Zaghlul Pasha and his followers from their exile in Malta. Lord Lloyd, in his "Egypt Since Cromer," described this event as an "appalling surrender." Others, including Wavell, took a very different view of Lord Allenby's action, and regarded this "surrender" as the prelude to a more honest and helpful policy in Egypt. The "surrender" was followed by the Milner Commission of 1920, which, in spite of tremendous difficulties, produced a report which changed the whole policy of Great Britain, and orientated it towards the independence of Egypt.

In Egypt itself a period of chaos ensued, during which the murder campaign began, and in the midst of which Allenby virtually forced the British Government to make the famous Declaration of 1922, constituting Egypt as an independent country, with safeguards to the British Empire Defence. Shortly afterwards a Constitution was constructed, and Saad Zaghlul Pasha was returned to power; but he was unable to control his extremists, and the murder campaign continued, culminating in, though not ending with, the murder, in 1924, of Sir Lee Stack, the Sirdar of the Egyptian Army. This had the effect of driving Zaghlul, the people's idol, from office, and the Egyptians from Sudan.

Agreement

It was only then that both sides were convinced of the necessity of reaching an understanding with the Egyptians, and substituting for hostility and discord the bonds of mutual friendship and accord. Here Allenby played an important rôle. The Egyptians respected and trusted him. As the author says in the book:—

"Both Great Britain and Egypt owe him a debt of gratitude. In a most difficult period in the relations between the two countries he upheld essential British interests without causing bitterness, and he secured for Egypt independence from the British Government and a liberal Constitution from the Egyptian monarch. It was unfortunate that his period in Egypt should have been ended by a crime of violence. But for this Allenby might well have crowned his work by negotiating the Treaty that was not achieved for ten years later, since there was no one in whose good faith and honesty the Egyptians had greater trust."

Biography and History

This book is most profitably read with its twin: "Allenby: A Study in Greatness." The latter is a truly fascinating character study, a study in light and shade. The book under review gives an unbiassed and authoritative picture, not so much of its hero's personality as of his remarkable career, and of the political background of modern history in Egypt. It is an invaluable source of information, well illustrated, and clearly it is the result of painstaking labour on the part of an expert witness with first-hand knowledge. The author has traced, through its various stages, the evolution of this great leader, and the modern history of Great Britain in Egypt.

The Irish reader should not miss the opportunity of getting better acquainted with the struggles and achievements of a Modern State which bears a great resemblance, in many respects, to his own country.

"Britain in Pictures"

The English Bible. By Sir Herbert Grierson, Collins. 4/6 net.

British Philosophers. By Kenneth Matthews. Collins. 4/6 net.

SIR HERBERT GRIERSON moves among the bewildering wealth of his material with the gracious ease of a veteran scholar. The reader is enabled to see, from the comparison of selected passages, how much of what is familiar we owe to Coverdale, to Tyndale, and to the translators of 1611. The author also touches, as only he could, on the verbal and other influences of the English Bible on great writers from Milton to Ruskin. The illustrations round which Sir Herbert has written his text vary in merit. There is one of Blake's water-colours to the Book of Job, Romney's portrait of Cowper, a fine engraving of Milton. But perhaps the most interesting are the typographical examples from early Bibles, in which the reader can compare earlier and later translations and styles of printing simultaneously.

Mr. Matthews has written a readable and informative text to accompany the pictures of "British Philosophers." The exigencies of his task have forced him to indicate some common denominator between figures as apart as Duns Scotus and J. S. Mill. The line which he adopts is tactful, but not without value as collective criticism. The latest philosopher dealt with is Russell, on whom he manages to say something useful within even such narrow limits. Among the pictures are a reproduction of the Christchurch portrait of John Locke, a witty and malicious caricature of Spence., an elegant print of the Library of T.C.D. (which slips in under the mantle of Berkeley), and a dramatic impression of Duns Scotus which looks like Daumier, but is XVIIth Century Dutch.

Once again it must be remarked that the general title of this series is becoming something of a burden to the excellent essayists.

Chapters from an Autobiography

By Seumas O'Sullivan

IT was only towards the close of our sojourn in London that we succeeded in achieving what was the primary object of our visit, when that fine scholar and genial soul, A. E. Bullen, consented to come to our rescue, and lend us his name. He was probably induced to do so by reason of the fact [of which we were careful to inform him] that the final selection of the poems in my projected volume was made by W. B. Yeats, and so, in the spring of 1905, I had the thrilling experience of seeing my first book, "The Twilight People," with its pleasant blue and silver wrapper, launched on the world.

My First Book

George Roberts, who was later to make a name for himself as the leading spirit of Maunsel and Co., had by this time been drawn into the enterprise, and the first consignment of my book arrived at the Abbey Theatre on an evening when both he and I were taking part in the first performance of Lady Gregory's play "Kincora." Roberts played the part of Murrough, and I the part of Maelmora.

I was, as I still think, one of the very worst actors that ever encumbered the stage, and on that particular night — my mind being altogether occupied with the books which I knew awaited me in the dressingroom—I was certainly at my lowest form as an actor. It was, indeed, on this occasion that I heard a criticism of my performance as an actor which completely cured me of any further desire to shine in that difficult art.

Exit Histrio

As I was leaving the theatre at the conclusion of the play, I overheard a conversation between two ladies who had been permitted to come behind the scenes.

"Weren't they splendid?" said one of the ladies.

"Magnificent," said the other, "except for that dreadful man who played Maelmora!"

Roberts, on the other hand, was a really efficient actor. He was a man of rather diminutive build and had a pronounced "Belfast" accent, but no one who witnessed his performance as Dan Burke in Synge's play, "In the Shadow of the Glen," can ever forget the prodigious appearance which he assumed, his force and strength, as he suddenly shouted from his "death-bed," with a terrific flourish of his stick: "I'm getting old, God help me, though I've an arrrm to me still!" Indeed, the whole performance of that play on its production in the Molesworth Hall (October 8th, 1903) with the magnificent playing of Maire Nic Shiubhlaigh as Nora P ke and W. G. Fay as the tramp, is among the things to be "remembered for ever."

George Roberts was introduced to me by another Belfast man, James H. Cousins, the poet, who has since made for himself a high reputation in India, and has attained very rare distinctions for his study of Eastern philosophy and literature. Roberts, when we first met, was living in lodgings in Haddington road, and I have a most vivid memory of him with his wild hair, his huge "walrus" moustache, as he strode about his bed-sittingroom on a Sunday morning, robed in a yellow dressing-gown, smoking a long meerschaum pipe, and declaiming passages from his favourite poet, George Meredith, in a voice that trembled and grew hoarse with emotion.

Actor and Publisher

His boundless energy, his myriad-sided interests soon began to feel the necessity of breaking away from the narrow life to which his employment held him bound (he was at that time doing the work of a clerk in some Dublin coal-office, if I remember rightly), and he threw himself with a mighty enthusiasm into the work of the newly-formed National Theatre Society. Here as I have said, he achieved considerable distinction as an actor, but his special genius lay rather in books and in book production, and the publishing enterprise which had been inaugurated in such a small way by myself offered him an opportunity at which he "just lept"—as they say in the North of Ireland.

Of his success in this direction it is not necessary to write. A glance at any of his catalogues from 1906 to 1921 will at once reveal the fact that almost every Irish writer of any note is among those who had their works published by him. Yeats, A.E., Padraic Colum, Austin Clarke, James Stephens, J. M. Synge, Joseph Campbell, James Cousins are among the names which flash out to us from any of his lists. His Abbey Theatre Series of Plays is known wherever any interest is taken in Irish drama. It was inaugurated by the publication of Lady Gregory's "Kincora"—in the production of which I made my final exit as an actor—and it included before its conclusion many notable plays by Synge, Lennox Robinson, T. C. Murray, Padraic Colum, Seumas O'Kelly, Rutherford Mayne and many others.

The Tower Press

Another enterprise, and one in which I had a more personal interest, was the publication of the Tower Press Booklets. The first series of these, six in number, had their origin in a conversation which took place in 1905 at our rooms in Dawson Chambers. Among those who were present on the occasion, if my memory can be trusted, were A.E., T. G. Keohler, John Eglinton, and probably Frederick Ryan, all of whom contributed booklets. It was, I fancy, John Eglinton who mentioned the project to George Moore, then living at Ely place, and to our great joy—and, must admit, to our great amusement—the author of "Modern Painting" not only expressed his enthusiastic interest in our publishing venture, but volunteered to give us a contribution, and accordingly his "Reminiscences of the Impressionist Painters" appeared as the third number in our series.

The booklets were printed on a little press at 28 Cornmarket, Dublin, and were bound in wrappers of various colours, but all bearing on the cover the design of an Irish round tower, after a drawing by Mrs. Murray Robertson, a pupil of Charles Conder, and herself distinguished as an exquisite worker in the designing of fans. I mention particularly the drawing of the Irish round tower in order to disprove a suggestion which has been made—without any foundation whatever—that the name selected for our booklets had some connection with the Martello T wer at Sandycove, of which I have written elsewhere.

The little booklets, with the exception of A.E.'s "Essays," and Moore's "Impressionist Painters," were slow to sell, even at the modest price of one shilling each; and I was painfully reminded of the fact a few years ago when I saw, in the catalogue of a great London bookseller, the entry "Reminiscences of the Impressionist Painters, by George Moore 1st ed., original wrappers, 1906 (with autograph of the editor on fly-leaf), price six pounds. Another copy (without autograph), four pounds."

STATUE, SYMBOL AND POET

(NOT CONCERNING THOMAS MOORE)

By Patrick Kavanagh

I

THE cowardice of Ireland is in his statue,
No poet's honoured when they wreathe this stone.
An old shopkeeper who has dealt in the marrow-bone
Of his neighbours looks at you.
Dim-eyed, degenerate, he is admiring his god,
The bank-manager who hears his monthly confession,
The tedious narrative of a mediocrity's passion,
The shallow, safe sins that never become a flood
To sweep themselves away. From under
His coat-lapels the vermin creep, as Joyce
Noted in passing on his exile's way.
O in the wreathing of this stone now I wonder
If there is not somehow the worship of the lice
That crawl upon the seven-deadened clay.

II

They lay a wreathe upon the dead,
For the dead will wear the cap of any racket;
The corpse will not put his elbows through his jacket
Or contradict the words some liar has said.
The corpse can be fitted out to deceive:
Fake thought, fake love, fake ideal—
And rogues can sell its guaranteed appeal,
Guaranteed to work and never come alive
The poet would not stay poetical,
And his humility was far from being pliable—
Voluptuary to-morrow, to-day ascetical,
His morning gentleness was the evening's rage.
But here we give you death, the old reliable,
Whose white blood cannot blot the respectable page.

III

Some clay the lice have stirred
Falls now forever into hell's lousy hollows.
The terrible peace is that follows
The annihilation of the flesh rotted word.
But hope! The poet comes again to build
A new city high above lust and logic;
The trucks of language overflow and magic
At every turn of the living road is spilled.
The sense is oversense—no need more
To analyse, to controvert, or turn
The laugh against a cynic's leer of power.
In his own city now he lives before
The clay earth was made, as Adam never-born,
His light unprisoned in a dinner-hour.

Village Life

Your Village And Mine. By C. H. Gardiner. Faber and Faber. 7/6 net.

IN this book a Local Government official, himself a countryman, writes of the English village as it is, how it came to be what it is, and what is likely to become of it. There can be few books on the subject which combine readability with so much hard fact. Mr. Gardiner treats his subject without sentimentality or cynicism. But he is a firm believer in the agricultural population as the backbone of even such an industrialised society as that of Britain, while he shows at the same time some understandable distrust of the predominantly urban control of affairs.

One of his most cogent points is that, on the financial side, the centre of gravity is inevitably urban. The equitable distribution of essential services, therefore, can come about only through a co-operation involving (to begin with, at least) some degree of altruism. His plain account of the difficulties involved in extending certain services to the remoter parts even of England must operate on Irish readers as a strong a fortiori argument. Another, more personal, opinion which he puts forward reflects on Ireland in a different way. He suggests two optimum population figures for the village and the small town respectively. It is, perhaps, significant that the majority of Irish examples seem to fall between the two. The village, as it occurs in England, is virtually unknown here; and it seems that the factor of size is the crucial one in forming the social character. The problem may at some time demand solution by Irish planners, although English conditions may afford little guidance.

Mr. Gardiner, who shows a wide knowledge of the English village in general, illustrates most of his points by accounts of particular people in particular villages. These are almost invariably diverting, and serve, without irrelevance, to enable the reader to digest a great deal of statistical knowledge before he is aware of having done so. The book is illustrated by a number of excellent photographs. A similar work on Ireland is badly needed.

Autobiography

Dust Tracks On a Road. By Zora Neale Hurston. Hutchinson. 12/6 net.

IN Ireland we are so far away from coloured problems that we may, unwittingly, use terms that are offensive when we discuss the subject even superficially. Miss Hurston maintains that she has been a negro three times—a negro baby, a negro girl, and a negro woman. "You can consider me Old Tar Brush in person if you want to," she writes. In the circumstances one seems to have permission to fire right ahead without any nice picking and choosing of words.

She has written a number of novels, and this is the story of her own life, with her views on love, religion and race. She was born at Eatonville, the first incorporated negro town in America, and by hard work, including two years as maid to a singer in a touring opera company, she worked her way through school and university, winning successes that are implied rather than specified in her book. She has met all sorts of interesting persons, but mentions them casually rather than boastfully. Nearly everything that she writes is informative, much is dramatic, and the whole book is lit up with humour, and a use of what, in the absence of any knowledge to the contrary, we must regard as negro idiom.

New Fiction

Green Afternoon. By Margaret Duley. Methuen. 8/6 net.

THIS is an intelligent and sensitively written novel. Its main theme is the love of twice-widowed Sara Colville and John Murray Blair, a mature business man, successful in his career, but not in his marriage. Blair's love for his son, Noel, which is the ruling passion of his life, comes between them and their happiness, and they inevitably part. There are many other delightful characters in this book, which is both wittily and delicately written. It is, in fact, that comparatively rare thing—a love story for the adult mind.

Happy Families. By Elizabeth Carfrae. Hutchinson. 9/- net.

Miss Elizabeth Carfrae is one of the most skilful writers of popular romantic novels, and her admirers—who are many—will recognise this as a typical work. It deals with the not uncommon theme of the impact of a large number of evacuees on a little village in Surrey. Naturally, they make quite a considerable ripple in such a quiet pool, and the story of the complications into which the well-mixed characters are drawn makes easy reading.

Ghost Mess. By Thurlow Craig. Hutchinson. 8/6 net.

Although many of the usual ingredients of the Wild West "thriller" are to be found herein, there is much that is novel and even highly exciting, despite the change of country and scenery. The author has placed the scenes of his novel in South America, where, as he remarks, a number of old-style cowboys still function, some from a desire to continue their former ways of life amid freedom from advancing civilisation, others because the law had begun to take an interest in their movements.

Miscellaneous

Thucydides. Edited in translation by Sir Richard Livingstone. Oxford University Press (Humphrey Milford). 3/- net.

THE latest book in the World's Classics series—still, under war conditions, admirably printed and produced—will prove a most worthy addition. Thucydides is not everybody's author, but Sir Richard Livingstone, by slight abridgment, and helpful—but not too frequent—notes, has done a great deal to assist the would-be reader of what is, perhaps, the greatest of all histories. The translation used is, in the main, that of Crawley; but the editor has not erred in choosing Sir Alfred Zimmern's magnificent rendering of the Funeral Oration. Even the student will find so neat a volume handy to have by him; while the general reader may be surprised to find between the covers of a "classic" a narrative with so much splendour, so much force, and, at times, so much pathos.

A Better Sky. By A. P. Herbert. Methuen.

Mr. Herbert jibs at the names of many of the stars and constellations, and, as usual, makes out a very good case for himself, with wit and not a little wisdom and commonsense. As he notes, many of the Heavenly Bodies are named after "the beaks of hens, the claws of scorpions, the claws of fish." These, in their original, exotic tongues, lose almost all their import. Mr. Herbert suggests naming the stars after various people of interest — Shakespeare, Drake and Nelson among them. His lists are comprehensive, covering the great names of all nations down the ages. His scheme deserves attention; for Mr. Herbert, often a privileged jester, is here both scholarly and serious.

Irish Art. The Parkside Press. 3/6 net.

This handbook on Irish Art, produced by a Dublin firm, gives a wide and comprehensive, if never very deep, survey of its subject. The symposium "What is a Portrait?" which has many notable contributors, produces nothing very exciting. Much more interesting, on the whole, is the section on art in the home, which includes good articles from Noel and Margot Moffett, Gerard MacNicholl, and—on prefabrication—Raymond MacGrath, D. P. Hanly and Joseph O'Neill, on the question of a Dublin concert hall, ought to be read; and there are several other features. There are a number of illustrations and a supplement on the literature of art, which is of great value to the student.

A golden rule.....
To avoid overtiredness

Sleep should refresh you—but if you have any tendency to miss a gentle regular movement of the bowels you know how easy it is to feel overtired and headachy. It pays to be practical about constipation—not to let it worry you and cause needless anxiety. Remember the golden rule and take Beecham's Pills. They are the perfect laxative—certain, yet gentle and natural in effect. Always reliable—and never habit forming. For one hundred years the wonderful reliability of Beecham's Pills has justified the trust of millions of families. So get some today—and look after yourself!

Sunday Morning Bus and Tram Services

The Dublin metropolitan civil defence organisations will engage in large-scale training exercises on to-morrow (Sunday), between 9.30 a.m. and noon

The indulgence of bus and tram passengers is asked for difficulties that will arise unavoidably during this period.

Services will be liable to diversion, alteration and temporary discontinuance, but details cannot be given beforehand.

Normal working will be restored as quickly as possible after the exercises have ended.

PUBLIC NOTICES

STOCKHOLDERS, GREAT SOUTHERN RAILWAYS.

Your Protection Association earnestly appeals to you to sign no Proxy Voting Papers for your Company's Annual General Meeting on March 8th, but to attend personally and record your votes on the Business of your Company after hearing all the arguments. In particular, you must be prepared to assert your Statutory Right that questions affecting your capital may alone be dealt with in Special General Meeting lawfully convened for that purpose, and your constitutional right to full and free discussion and consultation in the Press and otherwise as to your personal and business Railway interests, and including conveyance of your wishes to your Parliamentary Representatives which is essential with Transport Legislation impending. Remember that, over and above questions of Dividends and of Reconstruction, something greater is now at stake—nothing less than the ownership of your Undertaking, Essential and Vital to the life of the Community, which could not be replaced for several times the sum of your Capital before its reduction in 1933. On your action may depend the safety of Public and Private Property and even the Credit-Worthiness of the State.

By Order of the Committee.

MR. PICKWICK'S BOOT

IF Mr. Pickwick's boots shone of a morning he owed it in part to the painstaking care and industry of Sam Weller.

But only in part. For Sam Weller depended in his turn on the ability and industry of the once great firm of Day & Martin.

A hundred years ago the most widely sold shoe cleaner was Day & Martin's Blacking. Until well past the end of the nineteenth century the name was as well known as Dunlop or Guinness is to-day.

But Sam Weller's polish and the firm that made it have both vanished. To-day Day & Martin's Blacking is barely a memory.

In his valedictory address when the firm ceased business, the chairman sadly admitted that the failure was due, to a great extent, to the neglect to advertise.

The wise man learns from the mistakes of others. Public memory is short. You may have nothing to gain by advertising save goodwill. Which is everything.

ST. VINCENT DE PAUL ORPHANAGE, GLASNEVIN.
Established under the Patronage of His Eminence Cardinal Cullen in 1858.
THE ANNUAL SERMON,
On behalf of the above Charitable Institution will be preached ON SUNDAY, 12th MARCH, 1944. After the First Gospel of the Twelve o'clock Mass in the CHURCH OF ST. FRANCIS XAVIER, UPPER GARDINER STREET, By the Rev. TERENCE SHERIDAN, S.J.
2,313 Orphans have been admitted since its establishment.
The present high costs of food, clothing, fuel and other necessaries have placed an additional burden on the Committee. The expenditure in 1942 was over £7,000 and last year £8,000. A deficit of £2,000 will have to be met.
In February of last year an accidental fire destroyed the playhall and some classrooms, causing considerable inconvenience to the working of the School. The Committee are compelled to rebuild, and this will involve a considerable unforeseen outlay.
They appeal with confidence to the charitable public for funds to enable them to carry on the work.
Donations will be received by His Grace Most Rev. Dr. McQuaid, Archbishop of Dublin; by the Rev. Preacher; the Jesuit Fathers and the Clergy of the Dublin Diocese; also by the President of the Superior Council of Ireland; Rev. Superior of the Orphanage, and SATURDAY, MARCH 4, 1944.

The Russian Front

The latest Russian offensive, which covers roughly the line from Narva to Vitebsk, has a political, as well as a military, significance. Soviet generals are thrusting vigorously towards the borders of the Baltic Republics, and the Kremlin is hoping that their formidable advance will have an early influence on popular opinion throughout those States. Russia's great counter-offensive has been in being now for about eight months. Remarkable progress has been made. At some points the Red Army has advanced as much as 1,000 miles, while the amount of territory that has been recovered exceeds 1,000,000 square miles, the magnitude of which will be realised when it is remembered that Ireland's area is less than 33,000 square miles. Naturally this advance has not been achieved without heavy losses to attacker and defender alike. Probably the Russian losses have been substantially greater than those of the Germans, whose defensive tactics have been exceedingly skilful; indeed, many military experts take the view that the German retreat from Leningrad to the Pskov area has been one of the most masterly of its kind on record. The whole strategy of the German retreat has been based on what is known as the "hedgehog" system, whereby a number of heavily fortified strong points were established in the rear of the German armies while they still were advancing in the early days of the Russian campaign. Once they began to retreat these "hedgehogs" proved to be of great value. They prevented the German line from being smashed at any point, and enabled Herr Hitler's generals to maintain the elasticity of their front in a manner which otherwise would have been impossible. Although German methods traditionally are conservative, in the war against Russia the German leaders have taken the fullest advantage of their experience, adapting themselves quickly to changed and ever-changing conditions. Thus they devised what the Russians describe as "buffalo" strategy, hurling great masses of men and armour into threatened positions with remarkable speed. The Germans themselves refer to this system as the Feuerwehr, or "fire brigade," method, and, while it has been costly, it undoubtedly has enabled them on occasions to gain considerable time. At the moment, Russian pressure is strongest in the North, but Marshal Stalin's generals are so unorthodox in their methods of attack that they may switch their offensive down to the centre, or even to the South, at an hour's notice. They nearly all are men who learnt their military lessons at Stalingrad—mostly young men who have risen from the ranks and realise that the present war has made the majority of the military text-books as out of date as the bow and arrow.

Strangely enough, although the Nazi movement was almost entirely plebeian in its origin—with the exception of Hermann Goering and Baldur von Schirach, all Herr Hitler's closest associates were commoners—all the generals who have achieved fame during the present war are men of the old military caste. Marshals von Manstein and Küchler, are members of the old East Prussian aristocracy, from which the German Army has drawn the vast majority of its military leaders since the days of Frederick the Great. Marshal von Manstein, who has been largely responsible for such successes as have been gained by the Germans in Russia, has had an outstanding career. He is only fifty-six years of age, was at Verdun in 1915, and, when the Germans attacked Poland in 1939, was Chief of Staff to Marshal von Rundstedt. He commanded a division on the Somme in 1940, and was one of Germany's most successful generals in the early stages of the campaign against Russia. It was von Manstein who led the German forces against Odessa and in the Crimea, where his spectacular achievements gained him immense popularity throughout Germany. He also participated in the attack on, and the retreat from, Stalingrad, where he suffered a heavy defeat. He also was defeated at Kursk, and later on the Dnieper at Zhitomir, but on every occasion he contrived to execute such skilful withdrawals that the effects of his defeats were minimised. Now, while Marshal von Küchler is bearing the brunt of the Russian offensive in the North, von Manstein is holding on to his positions in the Ukraine with grim tenacity. Of course, the war is not nearly over yet. Monsieur Laval declared on Thursday that the Germans still had millions of highly-trained soldiers on their own soil, and neither the Russians nor the Western Allies are likely to underestimate the forces still at Herr Hitler's unquestioned command. Russia's successes during the last eight months have been prodigious, but it must be remembered that the Germans still occupy by far the greater part of Europe, that they still have formidable reserves of men and materials, and that, as yet, there is no evidence of any kind to suggest the least deterioration in their domestic moral.

Farming's Future

Last night's broadcast of the National Planning Conference, on the subject of agriculture, raised a point of considerable interest to every Irishman. What, in fact, is being done in regard to planning for the future of agriculture in this primarily agricultural country? Is the present system adequate to secure for every man who wishes to stay on the land a sufficient livelihood and a pleasant life? One cannot believe that it is. The flight from the land, with which we are so familiar, seems to have its root in two facts. One is that, under the present system of splitting land into the "smallest economic units," farmers are reduced to producing for their own bare subsistence, and surplus sons—after the one who inherits the holding—are driven off the land which cannot hope to support them, with their wives and families. The other fact is that the young people of to-day demand that rural life shall be brightened—that the living conditions and the facilities for recreation shall be improved, so that the country-dweller may live as comfortably and as cheerfully as his urban neighbour. Mr. Richards Orpen, a well-known Wexford farmer—whose views, owing to his illness, had to be presented "on the air" by a substitute—advanced a proposal which, he believed, would go far to solve both problems. This was, as we understood it, an arrangement fo. grouping existing farms into "economic units," each with its headquarters at the local market town. Within this group of farms, then, each type of produce might be developed on the farm to which it was best suited—one might go in for poultry, another for fruit, and so on; the headquarters town would act as a collecting and distributing centre, selling each farmer's surplus produce among his neighbours. The results would be that farm machinery, too expensive to purchase for use on a single farm, would be made available for common use; that transport costs would be cut down, since each farmer's surplus would be spread between a number of fairly closely-grouped neighbours; and that, at the centre, expert marketing advice might be available which no individual farmer could command. Incidentally, a wider range of occupations could be offered within each district, since marketing, office work, mechanical work, and so on, would offer employment at each centre. Such a re-organisation of agriculture, it was argued, would be beneficial socially, as well as economically. Each "centre" town would become a focus of social activities, as the increased use of machinery would keep greater numbers of people on the land, and give them more money and more leisure—since "machinery is not a labour-saver, but a time-saver." Villages would benefit, as country people had more money to spend, and would become centres of recreation, as well as of education and religion. The scheme deserves consideration, at least; for it is obvious already that the "smallest economic unit" is satisfactory neither from the economic nor the social point of view.

CRUISKEENLAWN
By Myles na gCopaleen

I, PRACTICALLY alone among evil men actuated by self-interest, take Irish terribly seriously. I encourage it constantly in my writings; and of the bounteous subventions of my purse, made under the brief pseudonyms "Anon" and "Fear gan ainm," this is not the time or the place to speak; enough that I am beggared in the cause of something that I love. I encourage the old tongue by speaking it night and day to my wives and sons. But in public I . . . . . I like to feel sure that the person I address is perfectly capable of appreciating my . . . hard, eloquent diction. I mean, it is frightful when one has made a long witty speech to get for sole response the traditional open-mouthed "Hah?"

Mind you, I do not deny that the fáinne does take one a long way towards avoiding such a predicament, nor am I unmindful of the wisdom displayed in having two types of this badge, indicating degrees of proficiency. I believe, however, that the thing can be carried a stage further, to the great advantage of the Language Movement.

Briefly, this is what I propose. Use a system of grading by numbers and letter, on analogy with the classification method employed by army conscription boards—you know this A1, B2, C3 stuff (1914 edition) —only more elaborate, more complicated, more . . . . . interlaced, as befits us all-in Firbolgs. I suggest that the top man would be 1A . . . . then, second to myself . . . say 4A, you'd get a member of the Gaelic League Committee; further down, a member of the Higher Studies Institute say 12C, Marshal Chiang Kai-Shek 6A, Mr. Winston Churchill 7A, Editor Irish Times, 1T . . . and so on. (You see the point? I hope thus to humble that chronic indigene, the flor-Ghael, by introducing him at concerts as an . . . . . 32F speaker).

A bit wearisome, I allow.

A Memoir of Keats

Once Chapman, in his tireless quest for a way to get rich quick, entered into a contract with a London firm for the supply of ten tons of swansdown. At the time he had no idea where he could get this substance but on the advice of Keats, went to live with the latter in a hut on a certain river estuary where the rather odd local inhabitants cultivated tame swans for the purposes of their somewhat coarsely-grained eggs. Chapman erected several notices in the locality inviting swan-owners to attend at his hut for the purpose of having their fowls combed and offering "a substantial price" per ounce for the down so obtained. Soon the hut was surrounded by gaggles of unsavoury - looking natives, each accompanied by four or five disreputable swans on dogleads. The uproar was enormous and vastly annoyed Keats, who was trying to wrestle with Orchanche. Chapman went out and addressed the multitude and then fell to bargaining with individual owners. After an hour in the pouring rain he came in to Keats, having apparently failed to do business. He was in a vile temper.

"Those appalling louts!" he exploded. "Why should I go out and humiliate myself before them, beg to be allowed to comb their filthy swans, get soaked to the skin bargaining with them?"

"It'll get you down sooner or later," Keats mumbled.

Extract

No other newspaper has so wide a reading public as the Irish Times. Recently we had a paragraph headed TAKE CARE OF YOUR FUR, addressed to our fox readers. It said: "Owing to the high prices fetched for silver fox tails, a new racket has begun in the city, where at least three incidents have been known of the tails being cut off in trams without the owner's knowledge."

A prominent fox told me yesterday that his colony had the matter under active consideration.

OBITUARY
MR. A. R. SHARPE

Mr. Alexander R. Sharpe, whose death is announced, was staff director of Hely's, Ltd., Dame street and East Wall, Dublin, for over twenty years. He was appointed Peace Commissioner in 1924, and since 1939 had been chairman of the Paper Bag Association, to whose development and influence he contributed in a large measure. An enthusiastic Freemason, he held high office in Great Priory, Grand Council of Knight Masons and Grand Royal Arch Chapter of Ireland.

FISHING NEEDS SKILL

"The common belief that fishermen go out with a net, throw it into the water, catch fish, come home and make big profits with the big prices charged is absolutely wrong," said Dr. A. E. J. Went, Inspector of Irish Fisheries at a meeting of the Geographical Society of Ireland in the Royal Irish Academy, Dawson street, last night. "Fishing is a skilled occupation, the best fishermen being those who are born into it. And the war has not made things any easier for them.

"Great as their hardships were in peacetime," he continued, "further difficulties have been placed in the way by the shortage of oil and spare parts for their engines."

BERTRAND SCHOOL

An increased roll and steady attendance were reported by the Headmistress, Miss A. H. Burn, at the annual meeting and prize distribution of the Bertrand School in St. George's Hall, Temple street, yesterday evening. Reporting on the Department of Education examinations, Miss Burns said that the general opinion of the schools on the leaving certificate pass Irish paper was that it was much too high in standard, particularly for a compulsory subject.

GAELIC REVIVAL

The standard and lack of literature in Irish could be easily overcome by intelligent leadership and money more intelligently spent, said Mr. Leslie Brooks in the course of a talk, entitled "The

Naas Programme For To-day

BACKERS are set several interesting problems at Naas to-day, where fields will be of the large proportions usually associated with this venue, which is equally popular with metropolitan and provincial racegoers.

In the March 'Chase, the best-endowed race of the day, John Kirwan, the Co. Kilkenny trainer, can be represented by the very promising Prince Jack and the more experienced Erinox. The latter, a Galway Hurdle winner, was going well in the Baldoyle 'Chase when he met with a mishap, and he appears to have a fine chance of making amends here. Whelan and Ajrds Moss look the pick of the others. Taken all round, it is a card that gives promise of some exceptionally open racing. Selections:—

Kilcullen Hurdle—Pelorus or Wellesley's selected.

Robertstown Hurdle—Cocksanook.

March 'Chase—Erinox.

Stewards' 'Chase—Question Time.

Osberstown 'Chase—Roman Hackle or Ruby Loch.

Halverstown Plate—Process.

Sallins Hunters' 'Chase—Spoiled Boy.

Curragh Correspondent's selections: 2.30—Green Ginger or Pelorus. 3.0—Slieveardagh or All Shell. 3.30—Silver Fame or Yung-Yat. 4.0—Colehill or Question Time. 4.30—Ruby Loch or Sovereign. 5.0—Golden Prince or Hudson. 5.30—Irish Ivy or Mount Hazel.

Corporal Dowdall Loses Irish Boxing Title

KNOCKING out J. Montgomery in the second round of a semi-final of the heavies in the National Senior Championships at the Stadium last night, Cpl. A. Quinn gave a display of hard, straight, well-timed punching such as has not been seen in this division for quite a while. He pressed from the start, and had Montgomery down for counts of nine (twice) and eight in the first round, and, although the Garda man came up with great courage each time, he was floored twice in the second round, taking the full count on the second occasion.

Two sparkling light-weight semi-finals gave promise of a grand final to-night. Both were won narrowly on points, G. Smyth beating T. Kavanagh, while P. Byrne gained a decision against Cpl. P. Dowdall, an Irish champion during the last four years.

The Smyth-Kavanagh affair was fought at top-speed throughout. Smyth impressed in the earlier stages, the speed and determination of his attacks overcoming Kavanagh's slight advantage in reach; and, while he took a good deal of punishment he was always quick to make effective reply, apparently unshaken. In the last round, however, Kavanagh, boxing magnificently, was well on top, but he could not quite make up the leeway.

NON-STOP FIGHTING

Byrne and Dowdall also served up a non-stop hard-hitting fight, and, while it was close running, Dowdall's greater share of the initiative appeared to give ample justification for a verdict in his favour. The judges, however, decided otherwise.

Nor was this the only questionable judgment; for both the losers in the middle-weight semi-finals, Sgt. W. Moore and M. McKeown, may count themselves decidedly unlucky not to have gained the decision.

The championships will be continued to-night at 7.30.

Santam—Semi-finals—W. R. Hall (St. George's, Belfast) beat Pte. J. O'Malley (Custume, Athlone) on points; E. Cannon (North City) beat Pte. W. Knowles (Clancy Cup) on points.

Feather—Semi-finals—Pte. W. Gifford (Griffith and North City) beat S. Fallon (St. Andrew's) on points; Pte. R. Phillips (6th Brig.) beat A. Biggin (Phoenix) stopped in first round.

Light—Semi-finals—G. Smyth (St. George's, Belfast) beat T. Kavanagh (C.B.S.) on points; P. Byrne (C.B.S.) beat Cpl. P. Dowdall (Clancy) on points.

Middle—Semi-finals—P. Woodbyrne (St. Andrew's) beat Sgt. W. Moore (Bray) on points; Cpl. D. Guilfoyle (5th Brig.) beat M. McKeown (Imp. Tobacco Co.) on points.

Cruiser—Semi-finals—Gnr. P. Swaine (Santry) beat S. McKeever (Phoenix) on points; G. Colman (North City) beat G. Dwyer (St. Andrew's), stopped third round.

Heavy—Semi-finals—Cpl. A. Quinn (Brig.) v. Montgomery (Garda Mon) and beat Pte. P. Kinsella (Griffith) beat Pte. B. Connolly (Custume, Athlone) on points.

Army Middle-weight Championship.

Semi-finals—Tpr. E. Mullingan (1st Brig.) beat Pte. T. Fitzgerald (5th Brig.) on points; Pte. W. Farrell (2nd Brig.) beat Pte. F. Curran (5th Brig. on points.

CENTRAL COUNCIL MEETING

The Central Council of the I.A.B.A. at yesterday's meeting at the Stadium, recommended that in cases of boxers accepting engagements outside the jurisdiction of the County Dublin Board the Board should be notified without delay.

Pte. M. McCullagh (Custume B.C., Athlone), who was disqualified on Thursday night in his Irish championship bout with F. Byrne, was reinstated.

As an emergency measure, it was decided to permit the Dalgean B.C., Dundalk, to compete in the Ulster junior and juvenile championships, the club to remain in membership of the Leinster Council.

Traders Charges Denied in Court

The adjourned motion for an injunction against the Director of Broadcasting (Seamus Brennan), the Commissioner of the Civic Guard (Michael Ryan), and other members of the Civic Guard, brought on behalf of Mr. P. M. Neale, trading as "The Tolka Agricultural Mills," was adjourned by Mr. Justice Haugh, in the High Court, Dublin, yesterday, until the judge had returned from Cork, which will be about the 21st or 22nd of this month.

Mr. Neale alleges that the defendants were conspiring to induce customers for Tolka Flour to be manufactured and supplied, to cease to deal with him for the product.

The reason for the adjournment was to give Mr. Neale's counsel an opportunity to consider eleven affidavits that had been sworn on behalf of the defendants.

Mr. Cecil Lavery, S.C., and Mr. T. J Conolly (instructed by Mr. P. J. Rutledge) are counsel for Mr. Neale, and Mr. J. A. McCarthy, S.C.; Mr. R. McGonigal, S.C., and Mr. Carroll O'Daly (instructed by the Chief State Solicitor) for the defendants.

Mr. Conolly said that he had not seen any of the affidavits, as they would have been filed only that morning, and he submitted that it would not be proper or convenient to proceed with the motion this day.

Mr. McGonigal said that his clients, with the greatest difficulty and with extreme expedition, had had prepared, and filed, eleven affidavits in the course of the week. Those affidavits contradicted in every respect the case made by Mr. Neale, and he would refer as far as to say that where statements had been made that a particular guard had acted in an improper way, they had gone to the source of those statements, and got affidavits from the persons alleged to have made them, that nothing of the sort had occurred. The only that, he knew a charge had been made against an identifiable guard they had got an affidavit from him denying the charge. They had also obtained some technical evidence. His clients denied that they had done anything wrong. He was prepared to agree to an adjournment.

Mr. Conolly said that, from what Mr. McGonigal had stated, it appeared to be essential that there should be an adjournment, because it might be necessary to put in further affidavits.

Jail Sentence Suspended

At Dundrum yesterday, Private Francis Nally, Castlekelly, Tallaght, was sentenced to six months' imprisonment for breaking into a lodge on the Cobbe Estate at Glenasmole, Tallaght, and stealing £10, the property of Christopher O'Connor, timber worker. District Justice Reddin suspended the sentence on condition that Nally paid back the £10 by March 15th.

Irishmen's Part In News Photography

The development of wire and radio transmission of pictures will enable newspapers to print photographs of an incident on the day after it has occurred, said Mr. E. F. MacSweeney, Art Editor, Times Pictorial, last night when he gave a lecture on "Pictures in the News" at the Royal Dublin Society meeting.

The first pictures to be used in an English newsbook appeared, he said, early in the seventeenth century in the form of a crude woodcut, although they were used earlier on the Continent. In the last century an American, Nathaniel Currier, collected artists to make pictures of outstanding events. Those were made into lithographs and sold all over America.

A Cork man, John Horgan, who worked on a New York newspaper, Mr. MacSweeney said, invented the half-tone process, which made possible the reproduction of photographs in newspapers. An Irish-American, Mathew Brady, had the honour of being the first war photographer, having obtained permits from President Lincoln to accompany the Confederate Forces in the American Civil War. Brady marched with the troops, and made about three thousand pictures of the campaign.

Referring to future developments, Mr. MacSweeney said there would be a trend towards the greater use of pictures in daily newspapers. In the last few years the telling of a story through the medium of pictures had become a highly-developed art, and was introduced to Ireland in 1941 with the foundation of the Times Pictorial.

Grey's Evidence in Gas Company Case

WHEN the Dublin Gas Company case was resumed in the Dublin Circuit Criminal Court yesterday, William G. Grey, Barnhill, Dalkey, General Manager of the company, one of the two accused men, gave evidence in his own defence, after the cross-examination of Harold C. Hoskins, Mareen, Dundrum, former Marine Superintendent of the company—the second of the accused men—had concluded.

The further hearing of the case was adjourned until Monday next.

Both men are charged that between June, 1942, and March, 1943, being officers of the Gas Company, they conspired fraudulently to take electric batteries, the property of the company, and apply them to their own use. Grey is also charged that, between June, 1942, and March, 1945, he fraudulently took and applied to his own use 19 batteries and connectors, to a total value of £117, the property of the company; and Hoskins is charged with having, between October, 1942, and March, 1943, fraudulently taken and applied to his own use 14 batteries, valued at £119, the property of the company.

CHECK OF INVOICES

Harold Hoskins, in reply to Mr. G. D. Murnaghan, S.C. who, with Mr. F. Sherry (instructed by the Chief State Solicitor), prosecuted, said that as far as he could remember advice notes were handed into the office of the Gas Company and filed for the purpose of checking them off against the invoices. It was a business proposition to do so, but there was not sufficient staff to always make the check.

Did you ever make a complaint to anybody based on the fact that you were unable to do this work?—I asked Mr. Robertson for promotions which would enable a man to do the work.

Judge Connolly—In the absence of a check on what basis could you certify?—It was a lax method, I admit.

Mr. Murnaghan—Did you, in fact, check the invoices? The witness was understood to say not as far as he remembered.

You are aware that Mr. Maher has sworn that he never supplied the goods mentioned on one of these invoices. Are you in a position to say whether that is correct or not?—I would say in the main that it is inaccurate.

On what do you base that statement?—I base it on my memory of that particular period.

Mr. S. McBride, S.C., who, with Mr. P. J. Roe, S.C. (instructed by Mr. D. A. O'Connor), appeared for Hoskins, objected to the method of cross-examination, as his client was not before the Court in respect of the goods mentioned in the invoice

Judge Connolly said that he would note the objection, but would allow the question.

LIGHTING SETS

In reply to further questions, the witness said he could not give any reason for the inaccurate invoice, nor was he aware why it had been submitted. He very seldom received goods personally, but would get information concerning them from some of the employees.

Mr. Murnaghan—Did the Gas Company pay accounts on your presumptions?—In certain instances they did.

Did anybody other than yourself and Mr. Grey know about the intention to instal these lighting sets on the ships?—Yes, the workmen did. They knew they were working on marine service.

In further answers, defendant said that he had been anxious to obtain saline batteries, but he was told they were difficult to obtain. In addition, they would be more expensive.

Arising out of the cross-examination, Mr. McBride asked if Mr. Maher at any time until he (Hoskins) was dismissed requested him to pay for the batteries.

Witness—No, sir.

Mr. McBride—Had you any clerical assistant or accountant in your office?—No, sir.

Was there an accountancy department in the Gas Company?—There was.

Was it part of your duty to deal with accountancy matters?—No.

Judge Connolly—Would it be a necessary part of your duty when the invoices were sent to you from the head office for certification to certify on these invoices that the price and quantity were correct?—Yes. I would ask one of the men if a certain article had arrived, and from him I would get my information.

Apart from what steps you would take yourself to certify in that respect, was it a necessary part of your duty to certify?—Yes.

The quantity of the goods supplied and price?—Yes.

That was part of the system that existed in the company's business?—Yes.

It was on your certification that the company would pay?—Yes.

Was it in your capacity as an official of the company that you gave instructions to have the wiring done at Barnhill?—Yes.

This concluded Hoskins' evidence.

CASE FOR GREY

Mr. C. Lavery, S.C., who, with Mr. W. Hamill (instructed by Mr. T. G. McVeagh), appeared for Grey, opening the case for his client, said that from Mr. Grey's point of view it was impossible to exaggerate the importance of the case. It was all very well for Mr. Murnaghan to tell the jury that they were to try the case as if it were the trial of a humble employee charged with stealing some of his employer's property. That was perfectly correct, and Mr. Grey did not want any treatment other than what would be given to any member of the jury in the box, but the case had not been presented as such, and did not come before the jury as if a simple employee of the Gas Company was charged with having in his possession a number of glass jars containing acid.

There was nothing about the framework of the case as put before the jury that would suggest that it was a case of a kind where an employee was charged with having in his possession 19 glass jars containing acid: the fact that it had taken five days was not consistent with the ordinary course of the Court when a person was tried with fraudulent conversion. Such cases were tried every day, and lasted only a day-and-a-half; but the jury was going to be asked to give eight or nine days to the present case. Therefore, they would have to consider the case as a case of exceptional character, notwithstanding the fact that Mr. Grey had no special claim for consideration, and that the circumstances of the case were very simple

LONG SERVICE

Mr. Grey had been Secretary and Accountant to the company, and afterwards General Manager. He had been with the company since 1914, and during that time he had organised the company to its present high level of efficiency. In January of last year some one called the Mechanic Foley appeared to have made certain statements about him, and Mr. Grey was asked by the then chairman of the company to make out a report regarding these matters, and he made a report and gave it to the chairman, who circulated it among the directors. Mr. Grey was then in a serious state of health; his wife was concerned about him; his doctor was concerned about him, and wrote a strong certificate that he should be granted sick leave, and was not fit to attend to his work. Notwithstanding the representations of his wife and doctor, Mr. Grey wished to continue at his work, but later the Board and Grey were satisfied that he should take leave and go away for a rest and medical treatment.

He went to Glasgow to his son. In February a Garda Inspector got a statement from Hoskins. While in Glasgow Mr. Grey was in frequent communication with his directors, and on March 29th Inspector Reynolds arrived in Glasgow with a warrant for the arrest of Mr. Grey, without prior notification or request for explanation, and without any indication that proceedings were threatened against him. He was brought back under arrest, and Mr. Murnaghan asked Inspector Reynolds if that was the usual course, and the Inspector said it was. The law of this country provided that where a person was charged with a criminal offence it was open to the Justice, in lieu of a warrant, to serve a summons. If it was thought that course would serve the ends of justice Having regard to Mr. Grey's position and the circumstances of his being in Glasgow, he was gravely prejudiced by the course taken in the issue of a warrant for his arrest and bringing him back under arrest from Glasgow at a time when Mr McMahon, chairman of the company, who had been in touch with the Guards, must have told them there was no question of Mr. Grey absconding.

NOTHING TO HIDE

When Mr Grey was brought back under arrest, having regard to the man's position and to his career in the city, it was a course which definitely prejudiced his case and his trial before the jury unless he (Mr. Lavery) had convinced them that that course was uncalled for, unnecessary, and should not have been pursued.

Proceeding, Mr. Lavery said that Mr. Grey had nothing to conceal, and his only desire was to ensure that all the facts of the case would be put before the Court. Mr. Grey had no personal knowledge of the dealings between Mr Hoskins and Mr Maher, and no means of gaining any knowledge unless what could be derived from the company's records. He was not concerned with any view that may be taken of the dealings between Maher and Hoskins. He added that Mr. Grey, in his report to the chairman of the company, had given a full explanation regarding the lighting plant at Barnhill. If Mr. Grey was guilty of having unlawfully taken those batteries then everyone having a gas cooker belonging to the Gas Company was guilty of the larceny of it. Mr. Grey found that his residence had been deprived of the facilities he was entitled to receive from the company. His house was lighted by gas, and the company were bound to give him light, heating, and cooking appliances under terms of his agreement.

When gas was rationed those dependent on it for lighting were very seriously affected, and such people must consider how they would get light. Mr. Grey declined to accept an arrangement that would provide him with a supply of gas that would be sufficient for the "off" hours, because he felt that when consumers in general were being restricted during particular hours it would be wrong for him to have this provision. Then Mr. Hoskins spoke to him about the provision of auxiliary lighting sets for the company's ships, and Mr. Hoskins designed a set, and it was installed somewhat in experimental fashion to see how it was to be done on the ships and also to solve Mr. Grey's difficulty for the time being. It was done through Mr. Hoskins and had nothing to do with Grey. Hoskins had arranged for the installation and Grey had paid for it.

GREY'S EVIDENCE

William James Grey was then called, and in reply to Mr. Lavery said that he entered the company in 1914 as secretary and accountant, and in 1929 he was appointed manager. Since 1914, in effect, he was the principal officer of the company. When appointed in 1914 works were derelict and obsolete and the financial position was extremely critical, with the result that a great deal of reorganisation was necessary. The witness undertook the reorganisation scheme, and the company had made considerable progress since he took over. It was now organised to give a supply of good quality gas under normal conditions. He believed that the Dublin gas works were now as good as any in Europe. Under an agreement of 1934 his salary, conditions and allowances and rates of employment were fixed for a period of five years. That agreement had been twice renewed for further periods, and the latest renewal would be operative from July 1 next for a period of five years.

Under his agreement with the company he was entitled to a free supply of gas and fuel. In 1942, owing to war conditions, the question of providing auxiliary lighting on the company's ships was raised, and Hoskins interviewed him regarding the matter. The witness gave general approval to the proposition, and instructed Hoskins to acquire the units if possible.

Proceeding, the witness said that his house was equipped with gaslight, and when the gas was restricted in 1942 he considered what he should do about the matter. Hoskins set up in a very simple way some gas bags which would be filled during "on" hours, to be available during "off" hours. He did not, however, consider himself justified in using them, as doing so would be taking an unfair advantage. He then tried candles and paraffin, but these commodities became scarce, too, and the position became serious, as he did a lot of his office work at night. He then considered electricity, but ruled it out, because he thought that the general manager of the Gas Company should not use the E.S.B. supply.
